

In Romania, especially in the remote rural regions, over 200.000 inhabitants live without electricity. The authorities, even in the face of new legislative proposals on the matter, do not act, leaving too many families in conditions of backwardness unthinkable for a EU member country. The activist Iulian Angheluta has therefore decided to commit himself personally to help them: with his association Free MioriÈ»a he travels around the country to install solar panels. The name of the NGO -Å Free MioriÈ»aÅ - derives from the name, MioriÈ»a, of a little lamb, protagonist of a Romanian folk poem about the inevitability of destiny. Fatalism that Iulian refuses and fights through the activity of its association. Free MioriÈ»a is financed through partnerships with large companies and donations from individuals.
