New Economics Institute (USA): the heart of the New Economics Institute's strategy is collaboration. Presenting an academically and intellectually robust new economics will open to partnerships with mainstream businesses and financial services that are looking for ways to adapt to new economic mandates. It will bypass policy disputes between campaigning outsiders and innovative insiders by focusing on empirical solutions. The Massachusetts campus in the Berkshires includes an office, research library, and staff housing. It is the home of the educational programs and demonstration projects—the legacy of the predecessor, the E. F. Schumacher Society. The close partnership with the new economics foundation of London has the advantage of combining the know-how and experience of both organizations and their networks around the world. The main goal is to help create a cultural shift simultaneously on both sides of the Atlantic through nonpartisan work with business, academics, and policy groups.
