JEANNE VAN HEESWIJK works on socially committed art projects with a specific interest in the social, political, and economical relations that shape the public domain in her projects she acts as an intermediary between situations and places and people who inhabits these places. In her project Freehouse Markt van Morgen she selected as her field of action an open-air market in Afrikaanderplein, in Rotterdam. Through a series of questions about the conflicts and issues that emerged in that place, the project aims to start a process of change with the contribution of artists, philosopher, sociologists and designers, as well as local people.
