A hybrid socioeconomic model to pair with sustainable compact urban villages focusing on education, quality of life, sustainability, and adaptability. The economic arrangement is a hybrid of capitalist and human-resource-based economic models allowing for a parallel non-monetary means of value exchange and a practical means of transition away from the present unsustainable capitalist economy. The Holigent economic and community model in practice would be largely self-organized and self-maintained, becoming self-financed through rental income within each non-profit-managed community. This model can be adapted and replicated to form networks of such communities from local to national to global scale resulting in increasingly reduced environmental impacts; secured quality of life including economic stability, physical and emotional health, and social harmony; and global awareness and collaboration.
