

open house project

public art project in the shape of a house, but can physically transform into a 100 seat open air theater, free for the public.

Open House - 2013 York, AL

Artist Matthew Mazzotta, the Coleman Center for the Arts, and the people of York Alabama have teamed up to work together and transform a blighted property in York's downtown into a new public art project this is in the shape of a house, but can physically transform into a 100 seat open air theater, free for the public.

Through open conversations, hard work and planning we have developed a project that uses the materials from an abandoned house as well as the land it sits on to build a new smaller house on the footprint of the old house.

Project author or developer:
matthew mazzotta

Where:
US / United States / Sumter

Website:
matthewmazzotta.com/artwork/3220494.html

